

GREEN DAY: A successful composting workshop was hosted at the Woolgoolga Community Gardens. PHOTO: ROBERT WATKIN

Busy in the garden with future plans

CONTINUOUSLY moving forward, the Woolgoolga Community Gardens has received funding and held their first workshop.

The hard working volunteers at Woopi Gardens are excited to have secured a grant of $5000 which will help with the purchase of landscaping, garden material, power tools and fuel to operate larger equipment.

Provided by the Department of Social Services Community Program and Volunteering Branch, the grant is positive news as the group has been busy developing gardens and infrastructure.

The gardens have had a delivery of a second container which will be modified to include a kitchen, meeting space and incorporate rainwater tanks as part of a goal for sustainability.

Another priority for the gardens is a covered outdoor area to provide shelter for community gatherings.

Organic producer David Wilson presented the gardens' first workshop, with a talk and demonstration on how to compost.

Woolgoolga Community Gardens members are looking forward to hosting more workshops and to keep working towards their masterplan.